Description: U.R.S.A Potentially Compromised; Extraneous Items In Digital Storage

Upon request of Lieutenant Brookshaw, I consulted on a strange reading in the ship's digital storage archives. There seem to be a number of photographs that have been cataloged away in a zipped file buried within the archival space dedicated to daily logs from the pilots in the cockpit. While the file sizes are quite small, of particular concern is that photos were taken using on board equipment at angles not possible to attain by the crew.

Is it possible that the navigational AI has made a mistake with regards to it's charting of the stars? Otherwise, has U.R.S.A been potentially compromised by an outside source? Please forward this to the AI R&D team, and follow ups to lscoresby@isspathfinder.org.
